SENATOR MONEY'S ADDRESS.

The Tamme Opera House Crowded to Hear His Earnest and Honest Talk for Silver.

It was a large and representative audience that gathered in the Tamme opera house, last evening, to hear U. S. Senator-elect H. D. Money, of Mississippi, expound the silver doctrine. Seated upon the platform were Mayor F. E. Olney, Gov. O. A. Hixley, Judge H. S. Wooster and A. A. Jones. Singularly enough, the first three of these gentlemen are life-long republicans. Dr. F. E. Olney, as president of the Bryan free silver club, in a few, well-chosen words, introduced Senator Money to the audience.

Senator Money began at the beginning of the silver question, and carefully reviewed the results shown of the present day. He showed that when demonetization was first discussed, that gold was the metal that it was decided upon to demonetize and that the reason for demonetizing either of the metals was to make money dearer and for the purpose of helping those alone who had fixed incomes, the owners of bonds, the owners of mortgages and annuities, to buy more for their money. This was the only reason given by the men who were in the plot at the time for destroying half the money of the world.

As to the act of 1873, he said that this act, which had caused the country untold distress, had been committed without one single public meeting to discuss the matter being held or without one single newspaper in all this broad land calling the attention of its readers to the same.

Senator Money then took up all the arguments of the goldbugs and the by on shattered them to pieces by his careful statement of facts and clear reasoning. He exploded the Mexican dollar talk by saying that he would have Mexican dollars to sell at fifty cents if the man who wanted to buy them could double his money on them.

He stated that Mr. Atkinson, to illustrate his argument in favor of the gold standard, said that if he took a gold dollar and a silver dollar and struck both of them with a hammer, that the silver would be worth a dollar. The trouble with Mr. Atkinson's argument is that he strikes the gold dollar twice and the silver dollar only once. He struck it with the hammer and defaced it, and then struck it with the die of the mint and recoined it. If the silver could be recoined, it could be taken to the mint, recoined, and would also be worth a dollar.

The republican party admits that it is the best thing for the country, but says we must wait for the consent of England to adopt it. Will seventy millions of people, in the whole world, wait the blood of the Anglo-Saxon and the conquistador, bend their knees on pregnant hinges, and ask the consent of any nation to regulate their affairs to suit themselves?

Senator Money then went on to state how the demonetization of silver had affected the country; that it had stopped the wheels of progress, for the reason that the percentage of increase in the value of money was more than any legitimate business would be expected to yield. The national bankers' association, Dun and Bradstreet, had computed that money locked up in a vault was increasing in value at the rate of 12 per cent. in one year.

The demonetization of silver had depreciated the price of the gold dollar, just as limiting the supply of air and water would enhance the price of those elements. The United States, owing to their constantly increasing population, their vast internal commerce and the enterprise of its citizens, needed a large volume of money per capita than any other country. The free coinage of both metals would stimulate investment, by causing a rise in the prices of property and products, consequently a stimulation to trade. The fall in the price of appreciated money would cause a rise in the price of property and products and necessitate the employment of labor, and a depreciation in the price of money would cause it to be turned into the channels of business to invest in property which was going up; this re-awakening of commercial life would cause the employment of idle labor. Idle capital means idle labor; when you find that your capital you find busy labor. No man can afford to borrow money to invest now, for property is going down. Under the present conditions, those who have money are hoarding it because it is increasing in value. There are no tramps in this country before 1873, because under a bimetallic system there was active employment for both capital and labor, and this condition of affairs meant prosperity.

He said that the country under free coinage, said Senator Money, because those who took it away would have to send it back to get our products. They say the silver dollar would be a fifty-cent dollar; it is absurd to say that a man would sell silver bullion for fifty cents when he could take it to the mint and get it coined into a dollar. European nations are maintaining the parity of silver and gold at a ratio of fifteen and a half to one, and therefore they could not afford to bring it to this country and coin it at the ratio of sixteen to one. Money never leaves a country or an individual unless it goes to purchase something or pay a debt, and if it should leave this country for that purpose, it could come back for that purpose, and trade would keep up the equilibrium. If all our gold went to Europe, there would be a surplus of money there, property would be high and money cheap and capitalists looking for investments would send their money here, and thus would the influx and reflux of money maintain the parity and keep its value stable.

Senator Money said that if Bryan was elected, that inside of six months the New Mexico and Arizona will be admitted into the union as states and that a Territorial form of government was an anomaly in a republic. He said that he had a feeling toward New Mexico second only to that which he had for his own state, and that if at any time he could do anything in Washington for the welfare of this Territory, his services were at the command of the people.

The speaker was frequently interrupted by applause and held the attention of the audience as but few men can do. At the close of his address, three rousing cheers were given for free silver, Wm. J. Bryan and Senator H. D. Money. The senator left for Santa Fe, this morning, preferring to take a freight, that he might pass through the country in daylight.

The company will spend about $50,000 on the work, a large portion of which will find its way through Trinidad's channel of trade, so that the company's loss is that city's gain.

A suit to recover taxes on the rolling stock of the Atlantic & Pacific railway in California was recently decided in Judge McKenna's court in San Francisco adversely to the railway company, which contended that all this class of its property was taxed in New Mexico, where the cars were stored. The court held that its due proportion of taxes must be paid in California, and that the road could not get exemption on such a claim, as the property was plainly divisible.

A locomotive standing on a side-track of the Colorado Midland road at Aspen Junction recently exploded its boiler. The engineer and fireman were temporarily absent. A man standing near it was cut on the head by a piece of iron, this being the only casualty. The engine was reduced to fragments, one large piece crushing through the roof of the depot and landing in the dining room. The great drive-wheels were smashed to atoms. The broken and bent axles were scattered and not a piece of the engine left that could be utilized for more than scrap iron.
